Appendix C Notes for Sections A through P633

Lists oldest and most recent death date (not necessarily age of stone) found in each section. Surname, most recent date of death and section number for each stone placed after 1896, as well as for stones not listed in either or both of previous books on Burial Hill.

Addendum Index of persons on Title page through xxiii648

- MAPS - Included separately are done on 8 1/2 x 11 sheets.
- They are NOT TO SCALE.
- Maps are hand drawn sketches meant to guide you. It is hoped that anyone knowing the location of any stones we missed will correspond with us so that we may make corrections.
- Most section are in multiple parts, number of sheets listed below.

Section A 3 parts

Section B 6 parts This section proved most difficult. Sloping downhill, numerous sunken areas and concentration of gravestones in the area east and toward the south of the Governor Bradford monument were problems.

Section C-East 1 sheet

Section C-West 1 sheet

Section D 1 sheet

Section E 1 sheet

Section F 3 parts

Section G 1 sheet

Sections H & I 1 sheet includes both of these small sections.

Section J 1 sheet

Section K 3 parts

Section L 1 sheet

Section M 1 sheet

Section N 3 parts

Section O 1 sheet

Section P 3 parts

- Care should be taken when walking downhill or uphill in search of any gravestones. Section B can be especially hard on a person with poor knees or ankles and use of a walking stick would be wise. Sections C-East, L and P also have precarious areas where care should be take.

Make notes of names on the way to the stone you are particularly interested in, include in your list the names of deceased two to each side and two behind so that you may reach your final destination with less confusion.

- PLEASE DO NOT SIT ON OR LEAN ON ANY GRAVESTONE.

APPRECIATION & SPECIAL THANKS

In undertaking a project such as this, we very soon found ourselves indebted to many people.

First and foremost, our daughter Cynthia L. Robinson of Framingham, Massachusetts, who after we relocated to Portland, Oregon, volunteered to do whatever on site work still needed to be done, including verification of maps providing many challenges. Without her persistence and capable follow through this work would not be in print.

Marguerite Lee Regan, Adult Services Librarian at the Plymouth Library, never lost faith that we could and would finish and bring to print our personal project. Her July 1993 letter of encouragement was the first we received. Beverly Ness of the Library staff frequently helped us with our research in the Robert Bartlett Room. Annette Talbot, president of the Plymouth Historical Alliance, Larry Pizer, Plymouth Town Clerk and Don Jacobs, former Plymouth Town Manager, never lost their support of our work.

Brad Bartlett, Cemetery Superintendent for the Town of Plymouth, provided us with everything we requested. His high enthusiasm for all we were doing really encouraged us. His loan of a blue print map, 1937 WPA Veterans Graves Project, provided us the original location of grave sites for Revolutionary War, War of 1812 and Civil War soldiers and sailors.

Tamson W. Burgess, reporter for the Old Colony Memorial (Plymouth) Newspaper interviewed Howard which resulted in a lengthy front page feature "Couple solves mysteries of Burial Hill" that appeared July 2, 1997. The Old Colony Memorial Newspaper Web Page carried this story online.

Tom Santiago, the staff photographer for the MPG newspapers, flew over Burial Hill and took several freelance photographs. We have included one.

Minxie Jensvold Fannin and James C. Fannin, Jr., of the Fannin Lehner Preservation Consultants, to whom we provided section maps and our gravestone numbers. They in turn sent us corrections and omissions found during their assessment and gravestone preservation.

James Blachowicz of Evanston, Illinois, for permission to note gravestones mentioned in his "The Gravestone Carving Traditions of Plymouth and Cape Cod," published 1998 in Markers XV: 38-203 Annual Journal of the Association for Gravestone Studies. He also has a collaborative paper (Vincent F. Luti on the origins of William Coye and his work in Rhode Island) in Markers XVII: 32-105 February 2000 and a forthcoming book AN AMERICAN CRAFT LINEAGE: The Gravestone Carving Traditions of Plymouth and Cape Cod: 1770-1870. See our explanation of symbols used in our work to designate stones from his two Markers articles that are found on Burial Hill. A number of attributions have been changed in his more recent work. "Lemon-Eye" carver; this is William Coye. "Goggle-Eye" carver; this is probably Nehemiah Burbank. Burial Hill stones by John and Winslow Tribble increased to over 600. Mr. Blachowicz, as of October 1999, has a file of approximately 951 photographs of Burial Hill gravestones. He will return to Plymouth in May 2000 to do retakes and more research.

POSTHUMOUS THANKS

Benjamin Drew, for assigning numbers in family groups, areas and yards. This allowed us to identify many gravestones and memorial which are not legible due to moss, lighting or scaling.

Bradford Kingman, for his Biographical and Historical notes and printing early recording work done by William Shaw Russell. Many of the early markers from Kingman's printed work are no longer in place but thanks to Mr. Russell and Mr. Kingman we have the transcriptions available today.

The following is an expansion of answers to the above question. We received this question nearly every visit to "The Hill". This question was asked when we were making headstone notations, when Barbara was observed lying on the ground reading vital information hidden by either earth or grass or lining up "rows" with red yarn to avoid missing head and footstones especially in the Eastern front section.

Burial Hill Cemetery is about an hour's drive on Route 3 South from the greater Boston area. It is situated on a hill above Town Square in Plymouth, Massachusetts, nicknamed "America's Hometown."

Our first visit in 1993 made lasting impressions, both visual and mental, that will never fade. We could never have imagined or can we totally appreciate the beauty of this one-of-a-kind burying ground. We were afforded an opportunity to visualize ancient times. We were now hooked on searching for ancestor graves.

At first we searched for Jehosebeth Robbins, one of Barbara's probable ancestors. Bradford Kingman's 1854 - 1792 work recorded Jehosebeth as buried here. Benjamin Drew did not find Jehosebeth's marker during his recording of the cemetery. This began our search. After more than six years of weekends, vacations and holidays of traveling from our residence in the City of Newton, Jehosebeth's gravestone was not found. During this time we had received many words of encouragement from tourists and local citizens, most urging us to share our findings.

This book is not only a six-year search for one ancestor, but it has netted us several more. Our index lists the deceased and others named on the stone, spouses, fathers, mothers and place of residence, birth or death when given. Previous indices by Drew and Kingman only mentioned deceased.

Burial Hill gave us lasting memories of historic Town Square, First Church, and on a clear day a view of Myles Standish monument in Duxbury and the tip of Cape Cod. It wasn't difficult for us to see in our mind's eye white sails of merchant ships entering and leaving Plymouth Harbor in the 1800's. The sounds of Plymouth's annual 4th of July parade gave us a wonderful feeling of patriotism and appreciation for our Pilgrim forefathers as we worked on this project.

Winds and harsh New England winters, with the addition of increasing affects of modern environmental factors will continue to bring about changes to historic Burial Hill.

We hope that 50 years from now someone will undertake a survey of conditions of the gravestones and memorials in place at that time.

[] Brackets were used to enclose names and dates (italic) taken from Drew and/or Kingman's books when we could not clearly read the marker inscription. Those markers for which the inscription is totally in italic were determined by the use of Drew's book first (he numbered stones in family or area groupings) and if he did not have the complete and clear transcription we then consulted Kingman's volume for additional clarification and identification. In one or two instances we were to find a strong possible using the published Vital Records of Plymouth.

-  This book symbol indicates that Drew and/or Kingman have biographical or genealogical information on the deceased, more often after Kingman.

- Definitions or explanation of use of some of the words in this work.

compass points - east, west, etc. are used loosely. When looking at the inscription panel of a stone if Plymouth Harbor was more or less to our right a marker might have been described as "facing south", at no time did we use a compass.

encased slate- the original slate stone having been damaged was placed in a hollow carved into a thick piece of granite for protection from future damage. See the following page for "encased gravestone".

finial - the small arch top of the sides of some of the old slate gravestones.

hip - our term for a portion of an old slate stone meant to be below ground level but due to erosion or settling is above ground.

judges hair - this term is used to describe the hair style of a cherub or symbol which reminded the view writing the description of the white judges wigs of the past.

moss - this term is used loosely since we are not botanists. We use it to mean growth that is not lichen.

paling - a strip of wood used in making a fence. Only one of these fences partially remains on Burial Hill in the 1990's. This is the Jackson yard in Section K No. 168.

shoulder - flat lateral edge at top of sides of marker or between a finial and the tympanum.

spelling - Every effort was made to spell names of persons as they appeared on the marker. There are instances where our reading differed with Drew and or Kingman and we have attempted to make note of those differences following the reference to their marker number for the deceased.

tympanum - the arched area at the top of old slate gravestones which contained the carving.

wasting - consumption; tuberculosis.

- The following words used in Drew's descriptions and defined in his work.

brimstone - as used by Drew, a rough cement.

freestone - as used by Drew, a reddish stone . See Drew No. 90 & our O26.

Goodwin Stone- Drew 295 In some respects it resembles sandstone; but some specimens afterward met with, presented a laminated appearance. The color is, in my opinion, a mixture of yellow and red. Similar stones - shall designate by the name "Goodwin."

encased gravestone -Drew describes what was probably the first of these, his No. 2162. Original No. 295, Nathaniel Goodwin (d.1771). This indicates to me that it was "encased" sometime after he covered the markers in this section the first time. He describes No. 2162 as "a tall handsome block of granite, from the face of which was scooped a cavity of right depth and dimensions to received and protect No. 295, --which, fitted to and secured within said cavity, will, it is hoped, successfully resist the assaults of time and the element s for centuries to come.", Drew, p310. See Goodwin Stone above. Our designation for Nathaniel Goodwin, d. 1771 is M54.

COLLECTED COMMENTS OLD AND NEW

- Pulmonary consumption bore its usual proportion, and pursued its ordinary fatal course, occasioning perhaps one-sixth of the whole number of deaths. Dr. Winslow Warren. Guide To Plymouth and Recollections of The Pilgrims, William S. Russell, Boston, 1846
- Prevalent diseases in the town of Plymouth were those affecting the organs within the cavity of the chest, Dr. Winslow Warren. Guide to Plymouth and Recollections of The Pilgrims, William S. Russell, Boston, 1846
- Idiopathic fevers assuming the thypoid type, were occasionally seen, but were not often malignant and mortal, Dr. Warren. William S. Russell, Boston 1849
- Dr. Warren wrote that among children, croup, lung fevers, cholera and diarrhea were the prevailing diseases, the first comparatively infrequent, but the three last of great frequency. Epidemics of scarlet fever and measles appeared and produced their average of mortality. Insanity bore perhaps rather an uncommon proportion. Guide to Plymouth and Recollections of The Pilgrims, William S. Russell, Boston 1849.
- "Plymouth's Burial Hill is the final resting place for generations of the town's residents. Among those buried are veterans of every war between King Philip's [Caleb Cook L-39] and the Civil War, Revolutionary leaders Gen. James and Mercy Warren [A-71], and the War of 1812. Gravestone on the Hill display some of the finest Colonial artwork in New England and show the changing views of death from the seventeenth to the end of the nineteenth century."

of the Robert Bartlett Room.

- When standing at this location on the North end of the Main path be sure to take a few minutes and watch the changing colors of the water over the tops of the buildings. We found this a very pleasant area to pause and reflect. Let the quiet and your imagination take you back to the times when ships anchored there. Perhaps you will also imagine as we often did ships with sails catching the wind and transporting passengers to Boston or cargoes to points even further.

Large boulder with a metal plaque erected by his descendants in 1891. The following information is from the plaque. He arrived from England in the ship Anne 1623 and in 1634 he married Susan RING, of Plymouth. Their children were Andrew, James, William, Susanna, Nathaniel and John. From who descended a numerous posterity. He married his second wife Mrs. Alice Hallett Nichols of Boston, in 1664. He lived in Boston for some years and also in Harwich where he was among the original proprietors. He died in Plymouth. He lived in the reigns of six British sovereigns and the Com'th.

Drew No. 633 It was in 1889 that I copied the inscriptions on Burial Hill. Since then I have inserted a few from such new monuments as came under my observation. Among these is the following, copied from a metal plate secured to a huge boulder recently placed on the grave of Thomas Clark. On said plate this name is spelled "Clarke," which forbids us to suppose that the spelling reform, of omitting silent letters, caused Mr. Clark's de(s)cendants to leave out the letter S in two words of the inscriptions. (All in capital letters on the plate.)

Kingman No. 1783

1997: Modern style, mottled gray granite. Polished face, rough hewn sides and back. Large leaf scroll. ASR marker at site should be a GAR for Francis C., who is listed on the WPA veterans project map as a Civil War Veteran.

- Downhill from this Robbins memorial is a piece of white marble wedged between a tree and the cyclone fence at the cemetery line. No sign of a base in the ground nearby. Perhaps the GAR marker noted at No. 27 was for this piece of marble.
- About 15 feet along the path is a series of four gothic shaped white marble headstones.

Allen C. SPOONER, born Mar. 9, 1814 and died June 28, 1853.

Susan L. SPOONER, born Feb. 25, 1814 and died May 5, 1880.

Footstone: A C S

1997: Largest and most elaborate stone sits on a light granite base. The stone is level but sits on a incline facing uphill. The inscription panel is outlined by columns, two on each side, with an arch between the columns. Reddish and black mossy growth on face of stone.

Drew No. 13 Very conspicuous, white marble, about 6 feet in height. Is somewhat injured at the base in consequence, it is said, of having been thrown down in a gale, some years ago.

Sally, his wife, died J[an.] 20, 1884, aged 88 years & [4] months.

[Also, Willie | Lizzie | Willie]

1997: White marble. Rough hewn and mossy. There is an metal strip anchored with heavy bolts on both sides holding the two pieces at a cemented fracture. The stone below the strip is definitely white. Puzzling, possibly chemical reaction of "acid rain" on the metal. The three small, individual stones were not connected to the parents by us until we researched Kingman's book for the next to the last stone in this section. They were thought to be footstones, surname unknown because the three names are no longer visible on the headstone.

ON-SITE MAP ORIENTATION

ON-SITE MAP ORIENTATION

(Guidance for those who are doing gravestone searches using the Burial Hill in the 1990s book)

The following are observations of the lay of the land to help you find an ancestor's grave/memorial using the maps that are provided with the book, Burial Hill in the 1990s, Plymouth, Massachusetts. Suggested is that the compass symbol should be on each map. This was not done because it seemed to make the maps more confusing since there are so many stones to be marked. Some people do better by orientating to the PLYMOUTH HARBOR and the PARKING LOT. Standing and facing the general area of the parking lot with your back to the harbor, you have South on your left (ring finger side) and North on your right. The CUSHMAN MONUMENT, the highest on Burial Hill, is also at the Southern end. Gov. BRADFORD obelisk is at the top of the hill, CURRIER/CHURCHILL obelisk on the North and the POWDER HOUSE on the West. These are not compass points.

Before beginning your search, it is recommended you first walk all the paths which will give you a better understanding of the overall map.

Now, begin by walking from the Entrance nearest where you parked or your point of entry up to the highest point in the cemetery (near the Gov. BRADFORD obelisk).

You are now standing on the MAIN PATH . On the overall map is the path that begins at the section named "O". Continue walking between Sections "A" and "M". "B" and "G", B" and "D" ending between Sections "C-East" and "C-West".

Burial Hill in the 1990s

For example, you have a 5th great grand parent in section "G". Standing at the top of the MAIN ENTRANCE path from TOWN SQUARE and having your back toward PLYMOUTH HARBOR you will be at the Eastern side of Section "G". Gravestone numbering began on the North side of the White Marble site marker for the original WATCH TOWER.

Section "A" - numbering began at the top of the MAIN ENTRANCE steps. Section "A" slopes in this section. It is divided by a depression which runs from the corner of the black wrought iron fenced yard toward the back of the FIRST CHURCH and by looking North from the former CANON SITE, a fenced area. From the SOUTH PATH forming this section to the MAIN ENTRANCE steps.

Section "B" - this is the most difficult section. Look at the lay of the land before searching in this section. Please be careful in this section, as the ground is very uneven and the slope is steep. A walking stick would be helpful especially if someone has knee or hip problems. Numbering began at the top of the SCHOOL STREET path at the Northern end of BURIAL HILL.

Burial Hill in the 1990s
ON-SITE MAP ORIENTATION

It would be best to locate a particular stone and then find the names of several gravestones near it. Work back toward the MAIN PATH, NORTH path or MAIN ENTRANCE path, depending on which is closer to the stone of interest, is also a good method of planning your search. Finding one of the family plots in this section is also a good way to begin a search. Due to the size of this section, it was necessary to divide Section "B" into six parts.

Section "C - East" - slopes down hill toward SCHOOL STREET and has a sunken area at the North end. Numbering begins at the Northern most end of the Obelisk in Section "C-West".

Section "C - West" - one of the easier sections and numbering begins at the intersection of the MAIN PATH and the path that runs uphill from SCHOOL STREET then down hill to the PARKING LOT.

Section "D" - is numbered beginning with the row nearest the MAIN PATH. Facing the section, (D-1) is the Southern most stone in the first row.

Section "E" - take the path South of Section "D" and walk down hill toward the PARKING LOT. Section E-1 begins at this Southern end.

Burial Hill in the 1990s
ON-SITE MAP ORIENTATION

Section "F" - it was necessary to divide this section into three parts. Return uphill to the MAIN PATH from the Southern point of Section "E". Numbering begins here at the junction of the MAIN PATH and the path leading down hill toward the POWDER HOUSE gate and the PARKING LOT. Here again, the observation of the lay of the land will help with the parts of this section.

Section "G" - this is fairly flat land. Numbering begins at the WATCH TOWER marker on the MAIN PATH.

Section "H" - this is one of the two smallest sections near the top of Burial Hill and is the first of the two. When approached from the MAIN PATH that goes toward the POWDER HOUSE between Sections "G" and "F". Stand facing away from PLYMOUTH HARBOR and you are at stone number one in this section.

Section "I" - is the second of the two smallest sections. Stand on the path between these two small sections and face toward the POWDER HOUSE and the PARKING LOT, "I-1" faces Section "G". Walk right on the path and around the section until you reach the junction of the path between Section "I". Then turn so you face number "I-1" which is the EDWARD GRAY stone.

Burial Hill in the 1990s
ON-SITE MAP ORIENTATION

Section "J" - numbering begins at the Southeast corner at a stone with corner lot markers.

Section "K" - this long three part section has the numbering beginning near Sections "H" and "I" at the Eastern uphill point. Stop here and look at the slope and elevations of this section. This will help you see where Section "K" is divided.

Section "L" - this section has a steep down hill slope to the path that runs along Section "P". Numbering begins on the path between sections "M" and "L" down hill toward the CUSHMAN MONUMENT. There are two granite encased stones at the path, the left one is number "L-1". Continue back along this path to the tree. Return back down the path toward the CUSHMAN MONUMENT, then walk back uphill to behind the tree and then back toward the CUSHMAN MONUMENT and back uphill walking the South or toward Cushman end again until you are on the LOWER PATH. Then follow that path to the obelisk at the Western end toward the POWDER HOUSE and turn going uphill again to the tree. Now, walk back downhill toward the obelisk and inward toward the slope to the LOWER PATH.

Burial Hill in the 1990s
ON-SITE MAP ORIENTATION

Section "M" - this section is North of the very large CUSHMAN MONUMENT. Numbering begins on the Northeast corner. Face toward the CUSHMAN MONUMENT and walk left to right toward the Northwest corner returning toward the East walking those rows running East to West down the slope toward the CUSHMAN MONUMENT. Once at the open area return to the Northwest corner and face East and walk left to right downhill then cross the open area and continue on the East side about midway down the North South path around the end and back uphill to the midway point.

Section "N" - begin at the Northwest corner at the CUSHMAN MONUMENT, facing East, walking along the path to the former CANNON SITE until reaching the SHERMAN/SAMPSON curbed lot. Facing South, walk this first part of the section which is divided from part two by the SHERMAN/SAMPSON and DAVIES yards. For part two, begin just East of the SHERMAN/SAMPSON yard and walk left to right or North to South. Part three.

Section "O" - this is the smallest section with the CUSHMAN MONUMENT in the Northeast corner. Numbering begins with the CUSHMAN MONUMENT and then at the step on the Southern end of the North/South MAIN PATH.

Burial Hill in the 1990s
ON-SITE MAP ORIENTATION

Section "P" - the numbering for this long section begins at the top step of the Southwest fork of the path steps heading away from the top of the steep granite steps that make up the Southern entrance from CHURCH STREET. The path continues along toward the POWDER HOUSE and is the path of Section "I".

BURIAL HILL CEMETERY PLYMOUTH, MA

There are four volumes that list Burial Hill gravestones.

- Burial Hill in the 1990s, Plymouth, Massachusetts (2000) by Barbara Bradford Robinson, Howard E. Robinson and Cynthia L. Robinson, published by the Plymouth Public Library Corporation. Books are only available for purchase at the Plymouth Public Library. E-mail: www.burialhill.com is a preview of the book, Burial Hill in the 1990s is the first work that locates and documents conditions of gravestones dating from 1657. This book took six years to compile. It includes 650 pages , 32 maps and 37 photographs; 2,000 alphabetical listings; every name found on gravestones and memorials is indexed; Names, places and causes of death are indexed; Lists of American Revolution, War of 1812 and the Civil War veterans; Lists of gravestones that were not in place in Drew and Kingman's works. Contains special notes covering gravestone places after 1896 listed by surnames, most recent date of death and number of persons on that stone. Handwritten maps of Burial Hill with an On-Site Orientation to help researchers to the locations of gravestones. Previously published works by Bradford Kingman (1892) and Benjamin Drew (1894) provided epitaphs for graves that had them. The only monuments of Mayflower passengers are those of Gov. William Bradford and John Howland.

- Handbook of Old Burial Hill, Plymouth, Massachusetts ... Its History, Its Famous Dead And Its Quaint Epitaphs (1947) by Frank H. Perkins, Copyright Chester E. Rogers, Rogers Printing, Plymouth, MA, reprinted 1996. Is a small booklet that details "The History, the Famous Dead and the Quaint Epitaphs of Burial Hill Cemetery". Available throughout the Plymouth area.

(REVERSE SIDE LISTS THE DREW & KINGMAN BOOKS)

• Burial Hill :Its Monuments and Gravestones
Numbered and Briefly Described

by Benjamin Drew

The burials are listed according to sections as indicated on a handdrawn map. Since this map was prepared, a number of additional pathways were added and markers obviously turned toward the pathway. The map lists only a small percentage of markers with a chronological index to these earliest burials. The index lists all burials up to 1894 and should be helpful in locating the approximate gravesite. In addition to the epitaph, there is a brief description of the marker and the condition as of 1894. The arrangement of the book is valuable in that it shows family relationships such as the three wives of Benjamin Dillard who are Buried around him. These relationships are not obvious in the Kingman book

Photoduplicated by the New England Historic Genealogical Society, Boston, xxii - 360pp. #P2-78705.

• Epitaphs From Burial Hill, Plymouth, Massachusetts with biographical and historical notes and illustrations (1892).

by Bradford Kingman

The burials are arranged in chronological order. It contains a map which marks the approximate site of the graves of many prominent citizens and numerous illustrations show the markers as they appeared between 1857 and 1892. The accompanying map lists 45 monuments and lots including the site of the Old Fort and the Powder House.

This book was reprinted in 1977 by Genealogical Publishing Co., Inc. and again in 1994 by Clearfield Co., Inc., Baltimore, Maryland from a volume in the collection of the Rhode Island Historical Society.

WHY BOTHER TO PRESERVE HISTORIC BURIAL HILL CEMETERY?

- * It has some of the earliest art and written history available in Plymouth today.
- * The earliest stones are archaeological artifacts.
- * Studying ancient stones tells us a lot about our ancestors.
- * Trade and commercial route patterns of Plymouth are revealed on the earliest stones.
- * Studying designs tells of the art and philosophy of the times.
- * A glimpse of our ancestors values are suggested by the development of symbols and icons on stones. Motifs similar to those commonly found in England, Scotland, Germany, and other countries suggest importance early colonists placed on their mother country.
- * Epitaphs reveal important information which may otherwise be lost in the haphazard or destroyed early records. They give important social and cultural statistics ranging from age and sex of those who were born or died in a particular year; to statistics regarding those who succumb to early diseases and periods of plagues; to less direct information such as attitudes toward women in the Plymouth area at given times.
- * Events of personal historical importance, such as the freezing of sailors in Plymouth Harbor on a frigate.
- * Entire books have been written from the wry New England humor found on some gravestones.
- * The rich and poor, famous and infamous alike are recorded on Plymouth gravestones. Local history may also be found here and no where else.
- * Burial Hill cemetery is an outdoor museum containing earliest written history on the gravestones and monuments.
- * Ready accessibility allows everyone to view, to appreciate, and to study outdoor documents in order to learn personal and local history.
- * Provides worldwide exposure to Americas' oldest cemetery.

Gravestone Chronicles ... Some Eighteenth Century New England carvers and their work by Theodore Chase and Laurel K. Gabel, New England Historic Genealogical Society, Boston, Massachusetts, 1990.

Why Gravestones?

Toward the end of the 1700s and well into the 1800s, family vault tombs became popular. Several factors helped promote their use. There was an exaggerated fear of grave robbing and body snatching as well as a self-founded revulsion against the overcrowded and often neglected burying yards of the early 1800s. And there was a desire to be buried with other family members and friends. Not only were these vault tombs more secure, but they guaranteed a commitment to grave-site care and family exclusivity that the deteriorating and overcrowded grave yards could no longer provide. These same factors led eventually, in 1831, to the founding of Mount Auburn Cemetery and the beginning of the rural or garden cemetery movement in America.

Wooden grave posts and post-and-rail markers, slab stones, table stones, church entombments and family vault tombs are the most common. But, probably the most common and familiar burial marker is an upright marker of fieldstone, coarse granite, or marble. Carved date headstones with their corresponding footstones became fairly commonplace in the 1670s. These early slate gravestones were very thick and relatively small. In most of New England the commercially carved examples had a larger central arch or tympanum, with two smaller arched side borders.

Before 1800 there were three basic gravestone styles in common use in New England. First was a winged skull or a death's head, a familiar death emblem in use since medieval times, that reflected the harsh, often ambivalent Puritan attitudes about death.

The second style was a winged face or cherub, sometimes referred to as a soul effigy, which seemed to stress the more optimistic attitudes of resurrection and immortality that were becoming prevalent by the mid-eighteenth century.

And third, the classical urn-and-willow design, which reflected the impersonal more intellectual feelings of the new republic at the turn of the century. After the first decade of the 1800s, as industrialization spread much of the originality and skill of individual carvers gave way. Manufactured grave monuments became increasingly available and popular in New England, hastening the trend toward conformity of this classical style..

Gravestone Chronicles . . . Some Eighteenth Century New England carvers and their work by Theodore Chase and Laurel E. Gabel, New England Historic Genealogical Society, Boston, Massachusetts, 1990.

God Bless You!

It was commonly believed that the soul left the body through the mouth.

Our custom of saying "God Bless You" when somebody sneezes is said to result from the ancient myth that the soul was forced out of the mouth by a sneeze, thus leaving the body unprotected and vulnerable to the terrifying powers of the Devil. "God Bless You" gave protection until the soul could return.

When this symbolism is seen on gravestone carvings it may also represent the soul being nourished by the vine, as the vine is a common symbol of the Christian Church or more specifically, of Christ, who said: "I am the vine, you are the branches (John 15.5).

Portrait Stones

Like the tablestones of earlier years, portrait stones were most popular with the affluent and well-educated, particularly ministers. Portraits like these became more common after the mid-eighteenth century.

Gravestones Are Our Legacy

Why gravestones? Because these stone records are our legacy - our link to the individual and collective heritage that defines us. Gravestones have much to tell us about our ancestors and the world they lived in. If we are willing to learn from them and to preserve them, it will say something of ourselves and the world we live in.

EARLIEST MARKERS IN NEW ENGLAND

Early burials frequently occurred at sunset, perhaps for symbolic as well as practical reasons. In many instances gravestones were purchased shortly after the burial. However, it was not uncommon to wait ten or even fifteen years; stones for husband and wife were often obtained following the death of the surviving spouse. The carved surface of a grave marker usually faced away from the body, with headstone facing west and the footstone east, and the body, positioned to greet the new day at the Resurrection, was buried between them.

The positioning of headstones and footstone suggest that the deceased has been laid in bed to rest for eternity. The footstone was an integral part of the plot, though small and simply adorned, often with only the name or initials of the deceased. In many New England burying grounds the old footstones have been removed entirely or placed directly behind and leaning against the headstone - to make lawnmowing easier.

Recent research suggests that the earliest markers in New England like those sometimes found in England - probably single posts or posts and rail. Some of the earliest stone markers were simply rough fieldstone boulders with name or initials of the deceased and a date carved by a member of the family or a friend rather than by a skilled artisan. The earliest slate markers of which we know, shaped and lettered in what later became the norm, is that of Bernard and Joan Caeb who died in 1639 and 1655 respectively. A replacement stands in the North Burying Ground in Dorchester, with the original fragments at the New England Historic Genealogical Society.

Developing A Plan When Considering An Old Graveyard

Before making any changes to an old graveyard, take the time to determine what preservation work is needed and how it can best be done. Establish priorities. What are the top priorities for a particular yard, and what can be relegated to a less urgent status. Perhaps even a second phase of the project? Prepare a comprehensive plan that is carefully thought out, organized, and practical. Good initial planning will save time and effort later on.

This planning need not be delegated to professionals, for in most cases the initial plan can be developed most effectively by those who are most involved, the people intimately concerned about the welfare of the old yard.

Consider the following eight points and decide how to approach each. Identify and begin work on projects that can be handled by untrained, unpaid volunteers, but simultaneously begin raising funds for the work that will require professional expertise.

In assessing the situation and making plans, these are among the questions to ask:

1. What legal body has jurisdiction over the graveyard? Is municipally owned, church owned, or privately held land? What are the local ordinances governing cemeteries in the community? What are the local ordinances governing cemeteries in the community? What are the pertinent laws of the state? Can you get permission to carry on conservation-related activities in this graveyard? It is essential that you be familiar with the applicable cemetery regulations, if any, before beginning any phase of a preservation project. Get permission and advise authorities of the scope and intention of your proposed work. In some cases a permit or other authorization must be obtained to keep the project within the bounds of the law.

2. What is the present level of security in the graveyard? Does the graveyard need additional security? If so, does that mean a fence, a wall, lighting, police surveillance, closing the graveyard at dusk? Are there other options? What will be most effective? What can you afford? What responsibilities can you assume? Try to pinpoint the individuals or organizations whose advice and services should be solicited.

Developing A Plan
Before Making Any Changes To An Old Graveyard

3. Does documentation of the markers and their inscriptions exist? If so, when was it done, and is this documentation available? Does it need upgrading, revising? If so, who is best qualified to accomplish this task? What should a good document include? How much of the work can be done by volunteer help?
4. What restoration or conservation work is required? Who can best do it? How well you find that person or firm? How will you know when you have found the right professional help? How much will it cost? If you cannot secure funds for a complete restoration, which stones should you choose to have repaired? What criteria will you use for your selection? How much of the work, if any, can be done with unpaid volunteer workers?
5. Should you make an archaeological survey? Why? What does an archaeological survey entail? What does it accomplish? What does it cost? Who could do it?
6. What is required in the way of landscaping? Is a landscape architect necessary? Who will do the work? What will it cost? How will the grounds be used and maintained?
7. How can you promote and maintain public interest in the preservation of the graveyard? Would it be useful to develop a walking tour or a brochure to guide visitors to the most significant historical and artistic markers? What educational civic or social organizations might have an interest in such a tour or brochure and offer their support? Are there members of your group who could organize a tour or prepare a brochure? What media coverage of your project might be appropriate? What other publicity would be useful?
8. How do you go about securing funds for a project such as you are planning? Do your group have access to a local fund raiser who might give you tips on where to begin, even if you cannot afford to pay for professional fund-raising services initially? What potential sources of funds exist for your project? For example, are any descendants of people buried in the graveyard still living in the area?

Developing A Plan

Might they be interested in helping to upgrade and maintain the burial site of their ancestors? Are there any government grants that might be applicable? How do you find out? Do you know any grant writers? Can you begin work for which you have funding, even if funds for the overall project are slow in coming? Would a fund-raising brochure be useful? Who could prepare it?

If a careful assessment and a comprehensive plan may seem a belabored approach, you should be aware that no funding organization is going to pay any attention to you unless you can first demonstrate a clear need and the ability to satisfy that need. Moreover, the early clarification of your goals and of the responsibilities of each member of your team within the framework of those goals will help the entire project proceed smoothly.

COLLECTING DATA

From Markers in Old Graveyards

Documentation is an essential early step in graveyard preservation, providing a permanent record of an individual graveyard. In most cases, it can be done effectively by volunteers. Several elements are included in documenting a graveyard, and each is discussed below:

Existing Documents

The existence of early and even of recent, documents can save much time in efforts applied to graveyard documentation. Check likely sources for existing maps and transcriptions of epitaphs that may have been made years ago and are all but forgotten. Places to start include church records, if the graveyard is or has been associated with a church, city records, local historical societies, local libraries; and individuals interested in and knowledgeable about activities concerning the graveyard. At some time a local group may have transcribed and photographed the entire yard, or at least parts of it.

Older photographs may reveal epitaphs no longer readable; they may indicate the condition of a particular stone ten, or even fifty years ago; they may reveal the placement of stones no longer existing in the graveyard, and they may even suggest earlier layouts, landscaping, and the general appearance of the yard at some earlier point.

Existing transcriptions of epitaphs can save much time in providing written information regarding the graveyard. Such transcriptions, even if published, should be checked against the original stones when possible, in order to correct any earlier mistakes.

Existing maps, too, can be of much use, since they may need only minor updating. An earlier map may also tell of the location of stones now out of place and may suggest where stones presently missing are buried (if they broke and remained in their original locations, only to be gradually covered with sod).

MAPPING AN OLD GRAVEYARD

An accurate map of the graveyard will have many uses while the preservation project is in progress as well as in the future. If an early map is available, check its accuracy. It may be useful in constructing the new map. It will surely show interesting alterations in the yard, and it may also be useful later in locating buried stones. Make no marks on the map; an early map is an important historical document in itself. If possible, have it reproduced and use the copies for updating.

If funding permits, and especially if the yard is large and complex, the ideal approach to map making is to provide an accurate survey by professional aerial photography or ground survey. Most often the map must be made by volunteers, however. The use of a grid system and the conscientious measuring of each stone from two fixed points will ensure a reasonably accurate map.

Prepare a base line, preferably following a boundary of the yard such as a wall or a building. Select permanent landmarks such as corners of a building for the fixed points from which you will work, as later researchers may want to trace steps in locating a stone. Clearly a tree that has since died or a stone that has since been removed will be of no use to them. If a fixed boundary is not available, construct a base line and a 100-foot tape measure. Divide the baseline into 10-foot sections using markers with flags. Then create accurate perpendicular lines in the field, measuring two equidistant from one of the flag markers. Take two lines of equal length and bring them together in what appears to be a perpendicular fashion. The point where these lines actually meet is perpendicular to the base line. In this way 10-foot square blocks can be created in the field.

On paper, plot the base line and the perimeter of the graveyard. Divide this into 19-foot-square sections to allow for ease in working. The work following will be easiest if the fixed points chosen for triangulation are also along the base line of the map. Establish and plot locations of major landmarks within the graveyard, such as a building, major monument, or large trees. Measure each stone from the chosen two fixed points, and plot each on the map for greatest accuracy, determine the left edge of the stone from the fixed points and plot the right edge in the same manner.

It is helpful to use a simple system of symbols to denote types of monuments and a numerical system to identify the stones. The numerical system should be cross-referenced with an alphabetical list of the markers by name of deceased, so that stones can be located on the map and in the yard both numerically and alphabetically.

When the documentation of a graveyard is complete, file a copy in a permanent repository - the archives of a state or a local historical society, the collection of a local museum or a library, or some other safe and accessible storage facility. Ideally, several copies could be made and properly housed. One copy should be filed with the Association for Gravestone Studies, where it will become part of the association's permanent archives, accessible to researchers nationwide. In addition, a number of copies of at least the most frequently used data, such as the map, the transcription of epitaphs, and the list of names of deceased buried in the yard, should be kept locally with a caretaker or at a nearby church or other organization for use by interested individuals who want to locate specific stones. With the extensive effort that a complete graveyard document represents, the document should be put to good use, and that requires that it be both secure and available

An accurate document of an old yard serves many uses. It clearly establishes that the yard exists, which protects it from encroaching buildings, roads, and other development. It identifies the stones that belong there and their positions in the yard. This assists serious researchers and also the general public in their study and appreciation of the yard. It makes it possible to identify a marker taken from the yard. And it makes possible the use of the best conservation methods, in both a current preservation project and those that may follow many years hence

RECORDING DETAILED INFORMATION ABOUT EACH GRAVESTONE

- Date of Record
- Name and location of the yard
- Type of marker: headstone, footstone, crypt, vault, obelisk, etc.
- Size of marker: above-ground height, width, thickness
- Type and color of stone such as pink granite, red slate, white marble, yellow sandstone, etc.
- Identification number for each stone to correspond with map
- Location of the marker within the graveyard
- Condition of the stone: excellent, good, fair, poor. Specify problems such as "missing right shoulder," "face spalling" etc.
- Name of deceased and death date
- Name of carver if known
- Ornamental carving: description and location on the stone of any generic motifs such as skull, winged angel, urn and willow or other identifiable but less common motifs, such as corn, ivy, serpents, etc.
- Other characterizing information

*Hints for Family Searches
in
Old New England Graveyards*

1. Survey the entire graveyard. Families did not usually own specific areas in early burying grounds. Family units were not always interred together. Many very old burying grounds have been rearranged or ever relocated, so that original burial patterns have often been lost.
2. If you locate a family group, record the names and dates of all buried there. Note the family names of adjacent burials.
3. If you do not find the family member you are seeking in the family plot, look elsewhere in the burying ground. Young married women, especially those who died shortly after marriage or in childbirth with their first child, are frequently buried with their parents (or their husband's parents) rather than by themselves in a new area.
4. Look for gravemarkers that are out of place, that is, a stone that reflect a regional style or stone material foreign to the local area. The source of such an out-of-place gravemarker is often a valuable clue to a family's origin.
5. Look for fraternal emblems and/or occupational symbolism on gravemarkers. Turn to local records of these groups for additional information about an ancestor.
6. Cemetery records may give details of a relocated burial, often revealing when, where, and by whom remains were moved. This can tell you where a family came from or where they went. Burial records and plot plans may also register burials for which no markers exists.
7. Look for early inventories and epitaph collections from area burying grounds. Markers lost through erosion, vandalism, theft, or neglect are often listed in these obscure accounts.

Hints for Family Searches
in

8. Remember to look in the burying grounds and records of surrounding towns. Town jurisdictions were not always as important as the family's proximity to a graveyard.
9. A tall mirror is a valuable asset when trying to read or photograph the letter on early gravestones. Use it to direct the sun at a raking angle across the face of the stone.
10. In Massachusetts, Maine and New Hampshire probate records and deeds are filed in registries at the county seat. In Vermont and Connecticut probate records are recorded with the town clerks. In Rhode Island both probate records and deeds are filed in the town.
